Natural Plant Dyes: A how-to & how-not-to

By: Carolyn Bradford
1. I took a giant skein of white cotton yarn and cut off three large sections, which I wrapped in to loose bundles.

2. I boiled up a pot of one part distilled vinegar to four parts water to serve as the dye fixative.

3. I simmered the bundles in the fixative for one and a half hours.

4. Once, the dye bath was ready, I carefully squeezed the vinegar-soaked bundles to remove excess fixative.

5. I simmered the bundles in the dye bath for four hours, then removed and rinsed the bundles.

6. I hung the yarn on a hanger to dry, inside of a holey garbage bag.

7. Once the bundles were dry, I wound each one into a ball for easy use.

...meanwhile, I boiled one large head of red their color cabbage until the cabbage leaves lost their color.

...then transferred the bundles to the dye bath.

2. About a week before creating the dye bath, I prepared the rust post-mordant by soaking a couple handfuls of rusty nails in a vinegar-water solution, until the liquid turned a uniform, opaque orange.

3. I boiled up goldenrod plants that I harvested in in a pot of water for about four hours, until the water turned a translucent ochre color.

4. I then strained out the plant matter and added the yarn bundles.

5. I allowed the yarn to simmer in the dye for four hours.

6. I heated up the rust post-mordent, and added the dried beige yarn.

7. Once the bundles were dry, I wound each one into a ball for easy use.

8. After allowing the yarn to simmer in the mordant for an hour, I removed the yarn, rinsed it, and laid it flat to dry.

...CAUTION: Pot is hot!

... then removed the bundles, wrung them out, and allowed them to dry completely.
1. I took a giant skein of white cotton yarn and cut off five large sections, which I wrapped in to loose bundles.

2. I combined one ounce of ground turmeric in three quarts of water on the stove in a large pot.

3. I brought the dye bath to a boil and allowed it to simmer for half an hour.

4. Once the dye bath was ready, I added the dampened bundles to the bath and allowed them to simmer for half an hour.

5. I then rinsed the bundles with cool water to rinse out any excess dye.

6. I allowed the bundles to lay flat to dry for a few days.

7. Once the bundles were dry, I wound each one into a ball for easy use.
1. I crocheted a basic hat using white cotton yarn and a size J crochet hook.

2. I combined one ounce of ground turmeric in three quarts of water on the stove in a large pot.

3. I brought the dye bath to a boil and allowed it to simmer for half an hour.

4. Once the dye bath was ready, I added the dampened hat to the bath and allowed it to simmer for half an hour.

5. I then rinsed the bundles with cool water to rinse out any excess dye and set it aside to dry.

6. Once dry, I added a white band around the bottom of the hat.

... meanwhile, I rinsed the hat in cool water then wrung it out to help the dye take to the fibers uniformly.

... then removed the hat from the dye and wrung it out completely.
