We will continually evaluate teaching strategies and student learning.

Each week, the teaching assistant will be responsible for selecting four to five students to stay after class for 5 - 10 minutes. The TA may notify you during the previous week, or during class that day, that you will be participating in the quality circle, and will request that you stay briefly after class.

Because there are 25 students, this means that each student will have the opportunity to give your opinions regarding class two to three times over the course of the semester.

After class, the TA will ask the group of four to five students to respond to these questions:
- In class today, did you get what you needed?
- If so, what was it that you “got?”
- If not, why not?
- What were the “highlights,” and what were the “lowlights?”

Students in the quality circle will confer, and will share feedback with the TA. The TA will share results with the instructor. Students are also encouraged to talk with others in the class to get feedback to share with the TA.

The instructor may occasionally pose specific questions for the quality circle to consider.

You are welcome to consider previous classes, and share your opinions regarding these questions above for other weeks as well.
